¹⁹ When mobilized its reserve personnel were insufficiently trained. The material and number of transport were insufficient. It had only 37mm anti-tank gun per battalion. The artillery was worn. It had no divisional anti-tank company

On 10 May 1940 the equipment and uniform situation had been, mostly, resolved. There were no 25mm guns in the battalions and only one 47mm divisional anti-tank battery. The allocation of mines was insufficient.

Casualties were very heavy. When the armistice was signed on 6/25/40 the division had 54 officers, 102 NCOs, and 659 men remaining.

²³ When it was mobilized it was at 90% of authorized strength. It had no anti-tank company and only 18 of 52 authorized 25mm guns. On 10 May 1940 it was at 70% of authorized (15% on leave) with great inconsistency in the cadres. There was still no anti-tank company, a lack of 650 horses, the motorized munitions section was at 33% of strength, there was little liaison equipment and the motorized equipment was defective.

²⁴ On mobilization the division was short of cadres and troops. It had no anti-tank equipment, with shortages in rifles and revolvers. The 81mm mortars had no aiming equipment. The motorized equipment was in short supply and in bad shape.

By 10 May 1940 it had received an anti-tank battery and a divisional anti-tank company, but there was no anti-tank equipment in the infantry regiments. The rest of the deficiencies had not been rectified.

³³ On mobilization it was organized from older classes of reservists. Only 4% of the officers were active duty. The armament was incomplete, no 25mm guns in the infantry regiments, and no divisional anti-tank company. There was a shortage of topographical and observation equipment. Shortage of uniforms and provisions were incomplete.

On 10 May 1940, despite the efforts of the system, the training remained incomplete. The units had 80-85% of their authorized strength. There were insufficient anti-tank mines, there were no 25mm guns in the 147th Fortress Infantry Regiment and the 11th March Battalion (BM) and none in the organic elements of the division.

On 5/21/40 the division, greatly reduced, was withdrawn from the line. It was officially dissolved on 18 May 1940 and used in the formation of the 17th Infantry Division.

³⁴ On mobilization the average age of the men in the 3rd Colonial was slightly higher than normal. The supply trucks were lacking, and there was no divisional anti-tank company. On 10 May 1940 the division was 20% under strength. Its anti-tank formations were complete. It was lacking in transport and horse. The 73/22 Horse Drawn Train Company had almost completely dissolved.

³⁵ On mobilization the 41st Infantry Division had 100% authorized personnel, but not Divisional Anti-Tank Company. On 10 May 1940 it was unchanged. Instruction was good, units were homogeneous and coherent.

³⁷ The 32nd Infantry Division had significant defecits in radios and optical instrumentations. The number of 25mm guns was at 50% of authorized strength and there was one 37mm gun per battalion. There was no divisional anti-tank battery.

On 10 May 1940 15% of assigned personnel were on leave. All other shortages remained, except for 25mm guns, which were at 66% of authorized levels. There was still no divisional anti-tank battery.

The divisional staff was lost at Dunkirk on 6/4/40. ON 6/14/40 all remaining organic elements were dispersed.

³⁸ The 43rd Infantry Division had a shortage of anti-tank weapons, 1 section of 25mm in 158th Regiment & 1 section in the 4th Demi-brigade.

When mobilized it was at 100% of assigned personnel, short of motorized equipment and had no divisional anti-tank company. On 10 May 1940 there was a shortage of personnel as a result of leaves and other authorized absences. There was a shortage of horses for the artillery and motorized equipment. The authorized number of anti-tank guns was not met, the 113th Infantry having no 25mm anti-tank guns. There was no divisional anti-tank company.

⁵⁶ On mobilization its armament was complete. It had slight deficiencies in radio equipment and horses for the artillery. IT had no ant-tank battery and the reconnaissance group was replaced by two cyclist companies, one from the 281st and the other from the 348th Infantry Regiments.

On 10 May 1940 the division was complete, except for the reconnaissance group. The horse drawn 75mm anti-tank battery was reequipped with 47mm guns in March 1940. The divisional anti-tank company became tractor drawn in March as well.

⁵⁷ On 5/10/40 the manning was complete, but there were still no anti-tank guns and a defecit in the vehicles, plus a shortage of about 400 to 500 horses.

14th Anti-Tank Co, 279th Infantry Regiment

⁶⁰ On 10 May 1940 the manpower of the 35th Infantry Division was 15% below authorized strength, not including those on leave. The divisional reconnaissance group had its equipment replaced with new equipment from the US on 18 May 1940. Otherwise its motorized equipment was insufficient, 50% of authorized strength. The division was short 600 horses and the 21st RMVE had no 25mm guns.

⁶¹ On mobilization it was formed from little and badly trained reservists. It had a very small active cadre. It was short of 25mm guns and radio equipment. The divisional anti-tank battery had only 3 sections. Overall the motorized equipment was incomplete, of varied manufacture, and worn out.

⁶⁷ On mobilization the 67th Division had a weak active duty cadre. It had no "compagnie d'engins", no 25mm guns, but had a total of 9 37mm guns (3 per regiment). It lacked 25% of its authorized motor vehicles. It also had a sizable personnel shortage.
