8 The Future of War
How Globalization is Changing the Security Paradigm
Capt. Johnny Sokolosky Jr., U.S. Army
The phenomenon of globalization has exponentially progressed with advances in communication and transportation technologies. The U.S. military must correspondingly reflect these changes by enhancing its capacity to project power in a future dominated by intrastate conflict, global terrorism, and urbanization. This article won second place in the 2015 DePuy writing contest.

45 Jordanian Society’s Responses to Syrian Refugees
Capt. Walter C. Haynes, U.S. Army
The influx of refugees caused by the Syrian Civil War could destabilize Jordan, an important U.S. ally in the Middle East, through a deterioration of that country’s national identity. The author provides context for the current crisis by examining a similar refugee flow of Palestinians during the 1940s and 1950s and discusses several possible outcomes.
