Doctrine Update 1-14

The United States Combined Arms Center publishes the Doctrine Update periodically to highlight recent and upcoming changes to doctrine and provide information related to doctrine use.

This Doctrine Update provides information on the overall Doctrine 2015 strategy. To maximize the understanding of the Doctrine 2015 strategy and the timelines of significant publications, disseminate this update to the lowest level.

The Commanding General, U.S. Army Combined Arms Center, is the Army Doctrine Proponent. The preparing staff agency for Doctrine Update is the Combined Arms Doctrine Directorate (CADD), Mission Command Center of Excellence, U.S. Army Combined Arms Center. Comments and recommendations may be emailed to: usarmy.leavenworth.mccoe.mbx.cadd-org-mailbox@mail.mil; or mailed to Commander, U.S. Army Combined Arms Center and Fort Leavenworth, ATTN: ATZL-MCD (Doctrine Update, 1-14), 300 McPherson Avenue, Fort Leavenworth, KS 66027-2337. Approved for public release; distribution is unlimited.

For the Army doctrine proponent,

CLINTON J. ANCKER III
Director, Combined Arms Doctrine Directorate

digital versions of current doctrine, doctrine updates, historical doctrine and access to the Joint Electronic Library.

Use of the Term Mission Command

In the past two years of reviewing doctrine, several trends have emerged concerning the use of the term mission command. While it is true that mission command replaced command and control as a function, it does not equate to a one-for-one replacement in written doctrine. The context of the sentence and the big idea the doctrine author is trying to convey should determine appropriate terms. (For further information regarding the implementation of the term mission command, please refer to the Doctrine Update 1-12 and the Doctrine Developer’s Guide 4-13.) The doctrine community should keep the following in mind when determining which mission command related term to use:

- The term command and control is still relevant to any discussion pertaining to joint, multinational, and enemy forces.
- As a general rule, the term “exercise” is the preferred verb when discussing how commanders discharge their responsibilities in regard to mission command. Try to avoid using such terms as conduct, employ, and so on.
- There is no such thing as a mission command relationship. Army doctrine still uses task organization to describe the act of configuring an operating force to accomplish a particular mission. Commanders task-organize the force by establishing command and support relationships. (Note: Army command and support relationships are similar but not identical to joint command authorities and relationships. Differences stem from the way Army forces task-organize internally and the need for a system of support relationships among Army forces. See ADRP 5-0.)
- Mission command did not replace the term battle command. The term battle command was rescinded with the publication of change 1 to the 2008 version of FM 3-0. There is no direct replacement for battle command as a term. The big ideas behind battle command are captured in the commander task of driving “the operations process through understanding, visualizing, describing, directing, leading, and assessing” as described in ADP 6-0 and ADRP 6-0.
- Commanders need support to exercise mission command effectively. At every echelon of command, each commander establishes a mission command system—the arrangement of personnel, networks, information systems, processes and procedures, and facilities and equipment that enable commanders to conduct operations (ADP 6-0). The MCCOE has reviewed many documents that include a discussion of mission command systems when trying to describe the information system component of the mission command system. An information system consists of equipment that collect, process, store, display, and disseminate information. This includes computers—hardware and software—and communications, as well as policies and procedures for their use (ADP 6-0). Ensure you are using the correct wording. For more information regarding the information system component of the mission command system, refer to ADP 6-0 and ADRP 6-0.
- There still exist certain “programs of record” for which the terms command and control, C2, or battle command remain in respective titles. In these instances, doctrine does not direct replacement of the term command and control or C2 with mission command.
Did You Know? (Adapted from Joint Doctrine Update 1 February 2013)
In joint doctrine, mission command does not replace the joint function: command and control. Mission command is discussed in JP 3-0 as decentralized execution based on mission-type orders. The command and control function is outlined in JP 1 and includes much more (for example, command relationships, tenets, subordinate functions, and so on) than mission command:

- End states are “attained” or “reached.”
- Objectives are “achieved.”
- Effects are “generated” or “created.”
- “Civil support” is an obsolete term. Use “defense support of civil authorities.”
